SYNOPSIS

This workshop is designed for health care professionals interested in exploring power relations and interprofessional dynamics in the workplace. Through short didactics and guided discovery, participants will become familiar with theoretical concepts and research approaches designed to make visible how power relations affect interprofessional education and practice.

The workshop will begin with a short overview of the critical research paradigm and common methodological approaches for thinking about the effects of power in health care contexts. Through a variety of guided discovery exercises, participants will learn to identify literature relevant to explore interprofessional dynamics and formulate research questions for exploring power relations and their effects on interprofessional learning and practice.

The second part of the workshop will immerse participants in the application of three theoretical concepts and their relevance to the field of interprofessional education and practice. Didactic components will be supplemented with small group exercises and large group discussion. Participants will be encouraged to draw on their respective experience as researchers and health care practitioners to consider the applicability of these concepts in the study of relevant contemporary health care problems and issues in Singapore.
